

PRESS RELEASE

Laws Consolidated, Inc., announces new Legislative Web Publishing System

Comprehensive web site for publishing legislation on the internet, that does not require any specialist web administration knowledge, and can be easily integrated into any existing (or planned) law production work-flow

April 14, 2003. Brisbane, Australia.

Laws Consolidated, Inc., an international company, based in Brisbane, Australia and specialising in law reform and consolidation, today announced the availability of the Legislative Web Publishing System - a comprehensive and complete web publishing solution for law drafting offices.

"We set out to design a system that allowed lawyers to control the process of producing legislation and publishing it on the internet" said Neil Adsett, CEO of Laws Consolidated, Inc. "The system allows ordinary lawyers like me to accomplish that and more, without having to compromise on quality or rely on (expensive) technical experts at every stage of the process" Neil added.

Administering the web site is as simple as completing a form in a standard web browser, finding a file on the local network, and then clicking "Send to Web Server." This allows legal drafting offices to easily manage and publish their own information on the internet without special web based technology experience.

"Truly groundbreaking, the Legislative Web Publishing System embraces standards based and open source software, making the solution completely flexible and timeless," said Gordon Wright, CTO of Laws Consolidated, Inc. "With point-in-time display of data and a comprehensive search engine, the system is a complete solution for web based legislative publishing. Whether you're a legal drafting office aiming to streamline existing publishing processes while saving costs, or wishing to publish your laws on the internet for the first time, the Legislative Web Publishing System will meet your needs with power, flexibility and efficiency."

The Legislative Web Publishing System, announced at the 13th Commonwealth Law Conference 2003 in Melbourne Australia, is based on "Open Source" technology, where the web server, database and application logic not only have zero licensing costs, but are computer platform and operating system independent. Also by separating the presentation, data and logic, the system can be easily integrated into any existing law production work-flow.

Pricing and Availability

The Legislative Web Publishing System details are available via the Laws Consolidated, Inc. Web site <<http://www.lawsconsolidated.com/>> or by calling Laws Consolidated at +617 3844 5236. Due to system and data site variables the price is strictly POA.
